

WORK WELL DONE.

When the Hon. C. C. Goodwin took charge of the Salt Lake Tribune, that fearless paper had been waging a hot fight against Mormonism for years, but it had not been able to shake a stone in the enemy's citadel.

Mr. Goodwin began his fight upon somewhat different lines than before. He treated the mass and file of Mormons as dupes of their rascally leaders. He did not abuse them, but began in an unanswerable way, to show them how they have been swindled by the leaders. He poured hot shot into the Bishops and Elders and exposed ruthlessly their thieving schemes for enslaving and impoverishing their unfortunate dupes.

He gave them friendly advice in such a kindly way that these people began slyly to read the Tribune. It took long years of patient work to get these people in a condition to listen to reason or advice.

All this while the church organs showered their ungrammatical filth and cowardly innuendo upon Goodwin. They painted him as a black hearted monster capable of any crime ever heard of.

He bore their insults patiently and met their assaults of stones, mud and clubs with the keenest rapier they ever felt, and once in a while a bombshell that scattered confusion throughout their ranks.

The fight at the ballot box, however, showed always the same result. The writer, who was for a few months associated with Goodwin on the Tribune several years ago, often saw him despondent and weary of waging what seemed a fruitless battle against the densest and darkest ignorance that ever fell upon a people.

His friends felt that he was wearing out his fine brain in a war that he would never see ended in his life time, and many a suggestion was made to him to remove from these uncongenial environments.

His life was frequently threatened, and at times a body guard shadowed him about the streets; a guard of friends of which he had no knowledge, for he scorned to show fear in his work. His friends feared for him, and if he ever had any fear he never displayed a jot of it.

Last Monday saw the fruition of all his hopes, and he saw the toppling citadel of Mormon power in Salt Lake fall with a crash. The seemingly bomb proof structure, against which he had been directing the Tribune guns for years, went to pieces like a house of cards.

It was as grand a fight as was ever won in the United States by a newspaper, and will live in the annals of fearless, courageous journalism.

What his reward will be for this splendid piece of work, we know not, and we believe he cares less.

The public "moralists" who revile the Louisiana Lottery make us weary. But we will stand in with them on a proposition to reduce the the Company's profits—i. e., to increase their patron's chances of winning. If we don't win a big prize soon we will start an opposition Lottery.—Grass Valley Tidings.

Newspapers which are running the ad. of the Murray Medicine Co., of Kansas City, Mo., are advised to secure their pay in advance. The so called firm owes the Independent for a year's advertising which they will not pay, and they persistently refuse to answer any communication relative to the claim.

Some wrapping paper containing the adv. of several leading business firms of Carson is displayed about the city. It bears the imprint of a Reno job office. One never sees anything in Reno bearing the imprint of a Carson job office. The Reno people are too fly for that.

On the trial of Deputy Coroner Williams of Fresno Thursday for presenting fraudulent claims for burying indigent dead, the jury disagreed. Coroner Bishop is now on trial on a like charge.
